Believed that Director Walters, of the A. C. L., is Still Negotiating.

Mr. H. Walters, of Baltimore, one the directors of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, who was here yesterday tend a meeting of the stockholders of the road, was seen in his private car at the depot last night and asked about the redepot last night and asked about the report that he had succeeded in buying some famous paintings from the Rome gallerles. He would not talk. He would neither affirm or dend. From what he did let fall and from what he did not, the inference might be drawn that he had been negotiating for one or more pictures, but at present the deal had not been completed. He has not recently been to Europe, and is conducting the transaction through some one else. It takes a good deal of red tape to get a famous picture of any sort out of Italy.
